Abstract: "People demonstrate a remarkable ability to perform complex, multiple-task activities in spite of the limitations of our sensory, perceptual, cognitive, and motor systems. A prominent theory that addresses how multiple-tasks activities are performed is that of the executive process. Some of the functions of the executive process include enforcing task priorities and arbitrating access to limited resources. It has been shown that

A time-sharing skill (or executive-process knowledge) is acquired during training on dual-task combinations. This dissertation presents the development of a computational, task-independent framework for modeling the acquisition of the knowledge acquired during training on dual-task combinations -- executive process knowledge. On a selected dual-task combination -- a continuous tracking task and a discrete two-choice reaction time task -- this framework, when given the declarative and procedural representation of the novice task, has produced an expert model whose performance is a good match to empirical reaction time and tracking error data for the task combination. There are three main contributions of this work. First is the development of EPIC-Soar, a symbolic hybrid architecture that possesses a psychologically-motivated learning mechanism and psychologically-plausible perception and motor systems. Second is the identification and classification of executive process knowledge and the taxonomies that result from this analysis.

Third, is an acquisition framework which consists of: a novel data structure for representing task strategies; a task-independent procedure for resolving simultaneous access for motor resources and learning new knowledge that avoids such collisions in the future; a second task-independent learning procedure which refines the strategy data structure and creates new procedural knowledge for performing the task; and a collection of guidelines that regulate how and when promotions are applied."

For patients and their loved ones, no care decisions are more profound than those made near the end of life. Unfortunately, the experience of dying in the United States is often characterized by fragmented care, inadequate treatment of distressing symptoms, frequent transitions among
